It is true that lots of people have changed their careers a several times and moved to other areas. Nowadays it's a very common tendency. Not only from Russia but people from all over the world want to live in a better place and to work at a good job to make more than enough money for living. Despite of some disadvantages that trend may have, I personally think it's a great development for people.

In all times people wanted to live a better life and in a good place. And it's understandable. They'll always want the best conditions for themselves and their families. The same in choosing a career: people always try to find the best vacancy and in a good company with big salary. I think it's a positive thing. While we try to find the best for ourselves we may discover new opportunities, new people, new ways towards our dreams and even learn what exactly we want from life.

A great amount of people probably will say that such big changes are scary, terrifying and simply exhausting. They maybe think it's better if you just stay where you are now and it's not worth trying to find your ways and new opportunities.

But I strongly disagree with that opinion because finding a better place as for living or working in is an essential thing for all people. You'll always have new experience, make new friends, maybe learn new languages and learn about new fields to work in. It's a hard but enjoyable changes.

To sum up I really believe that people changing their careers and places of residence ^{are} a positive development. You can always come back from where you started but you can't discover better opportunities in life without trying something new.
